Resume

The Lagoon 46 is a catamaran that reinforces the brand's fundamentals, offering a generous and bold boating experience. It embodies freedom, the sweet life, and innovation, all in a style enhanced by Patrick le Quément through new creations.

On the exterior, the Lagoon 46 offers well-balanced living spaces, with modular cockpits at the front and rear, a full galley at the rear, and easy and secure access to the sea. The flybridge, accessible from two sides, is dedicated to both maneuvering and relaxation. The central helm station provides both protection and visibility, and various sun protection options are available, such as a folding convertible top or a rigid bimini. Additionally, the dinghy launch system can be a classic davit or an electric tenderlift platform, providing a new living space at the rear of the boat while facilitating water access.

On the interior, designed by Nauta Design, the layout adopts a refined, elegant, and functional style. The owner's spaces are generous, with island beds for optimal comfort. The other cabins also offer impressive volumes, including the forward cabin that competes with the aft cabins. The finishes are meticulous, and interior brightness is maximized to enhance onboard quality of life. The connection between the forward cockpit and the saloon is made possible by a retractable glass panel that creates a sense of space without borders and ensures excellent ventilation.

In terms of navigation, the Lagoon 46 is performance-oriented and seaworthy. It features an enlarged sail plan for a better sail area/displacement ratio. The aft-positioned mast, derived from VPLP Design's racing experience, allows for a longer boom. In addition to a shorter boom and a self-tacking jib, the Lagoon 46 also offers an electric winch system for the mainsail traveler. The larger forward triangle provides a wider range of headsails and improves sailing efficiency.

In summary, the Lagoon 46 offers a serene and enjoyable sailing experience, combining performance, comfort, and elegant design. Whether for family or friends' cruises, it represents an ideal option to fully enjoy yachting.
